HOW TO LISTEN

DAB digital radio

The BBC's digital radio offer in the UK includes BBC World Service 24 hours a day. A special digital radio is necessary.

Analogue radio

Medium-wave frequency 648 kHz, which is beamed from Suffolk to north-east continental Europe, can be heard in parts of southeast England and London 24 hours a day (Europe schedule).

BBC World Service can also be heard overnight from 1.00am to 5.30am on the BBC Radio 4 frequencies 92-95 FM and 198 kHz long wave.

Listening via your TV set Freeview

If you view BBC digital television channels via Freeview, you can hear BBC World Service radio using the same equipment (Channel 710).

Digital satellite

Freesat is a free-to-air digital satellite television service (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Satellite_television) that carries BBC World Service radio on channel 711. A special receiver is necessary.

BBC World Service in English is available 24 hours a day, free-to-air from the Eutelsat Hot Bird 8 at 13° East, transponder 50, vertical polarisation, 11727 MHz. Hot Bird 8 services cover the whole of Europe, including the Canary Islands (Europe schedule).

Digital cable

Subscribers who receive television from Virgin Media, will also be able to hear BBC World Service radio via these services on channels 868 (NTL) and 906 (Telewest). Contact your local operator for information on digital cable in your area.

BBC World Service is one of the channels available to Sky Digital subscribers (channel 0115)

BBC on the internet

BBC World Service's award-winning website contains extensive, interactive news services, updated 24 hours a day, with audio available in 32 languages. It also contains detailed information about BBC World Service broadcasts, schedules and frequencies for English and other languages: bbcworldservice.com
